To Resume Selling 1933 Pooled Cotton, Covering Charges

Oscar Johnston Announces Action on Old Farm Board Inventory

A UNIFORM LEVEL

Aim Is to Bring Futures Contracts in Line With Spot Market

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Oscar Johnston, manager of the 1933 cotton producers' pool, announced Wednesday that effective at once, limited amounts of government pool cotton will be sold for immediate consumption or export. He said the decision to sell from pool stocks, a practice discontinued after the March 11 market decline, was made after repeated requests from mills and merchants for certain grades of cotton.

AAA officials estimated present holdings of the pool at 1,300,000 bales of cotton and 300,000 bales in futures contracts. They said most of the cotton was taken over from the old Farm Board and that prices now permit its sale at a level sufficiently above the agents' and government loan to bring carrying charges.

Bringing Futures Nearer Spot The statement by Johnston, manager of the 1933 cotton producers' pool, said:

"Beginning at once, cotton will be sold to the trade at the prevailing basis and in accordance with the usual terms with which the trade is familiar. These stocks will be sold in limited quantities when the cotton is intended for immediate consumption or export. Against all sales, the pool manager will simultaneously purchase futures contracts, distributing these purchases at his discretion through May, July, and December, 1935, and January and March 1936.

"It will be the purpose to conduct these transactions without market disturbance; to bring the futures contracts as nearly as possible to a level with the prevailing spot market and to raise contract prices for October, December, January, and March (new crop months) with a view to bringing new crop contract prices to a more satisfactory level.

To protect the near crop months, the pool manager will demand, and take delivery of actual cotton against May and July contracts, if such action

CHAPTER 1

IT WAS July, the hour 8 o'clock in the morning. Locusts sang in the high elms bordering the winding road which capped the ridge of hills. The deep blue sky was brushed over with wisps of clouds, and there was in the air a threat of the intense heat which would presently brood over the whole countryside in the quiet of mid-day. A bridle path wended through the stillness, and there was a creak-like hush in the deep places, where brooks ran over copper-colored stones and toads hopped in the leafy grass.

Katharine Stryker walked her mare through the woods, slowly at first, later spurring her to a more daring gait. The beautiful Katharine was frowning this fine morning.

48 Navy Planes Take Off for Midway

Naval Planes Leave Hawaii for 1,300-Mile Flight Westward

ON ROUTE TO CHINA

Midway Is "Stepping Stone" of New Pan-American Flying Project

HONOLULU, H. I.—(AP)—The greatest mass ocean flight ever attempted began Thursday when the first of 48 naval patrol planes roared out of Pearl Harbor for Midway Islands at 11:08 CST.

Midway Island is northwest of Hawaii on the projected Pan American Airways route to China.

Approach Japan

HONOLULU, H. I.—(AP)—Preparations for an unprecedented mass flight of 48 naval planes from here to Midway Islands, 1,323 miles distant, starting at dawn Thursday were begun suddenly Wednesday at the Pearl Harbor naval base, signaling the first step of American fighting forces toward linking by air the United States' Pacific territories.

The big squadron planned to be absent from Pearl Harbor about a month, lending strength to reports that some of the craft would fly from Midway, a small coral island west and north over here, to the Aleutian Islands, 1,700 miles further on.

Somewhere in the North Pacific, the United States fleet was playing an undisclosed part in the ambitious plans. The planes will carry enough gasoline to fly to Midway and halfway back here. About 200 officers and men make up the expedition.

No plane ever has spanned the Pacific between here and Midway, although the little island destination is a part of the city and county of Honolulu. Pan-American Airways has been erecting a way station on Midway Island for its transpacific service to be inaugurated this summer.

Red river levee at Ferguson bend, six miles south of Fulton, broke at 5 o'clock Thursday morning inundating hundreds of acres of rich Hempstead county farmland.

Fifty FERA workers were rushed from Hope to protect the levee between Fulton and the break.

The break at Ferguson bend flooded cultivated areas of the Rankin, Reed and old Battle farms. No estimate could be made of how many acres were flooded by the break.

Rises 2 Feet Red river at Fulton jumped another two feet Thursday showing a reading at noon of 32.8 feet. Flood stage is 25 feet. The rise during the past 24 hours was the most rapid of the last five days.

Relief workers from Fulton and Hope were making a fight Thursday afternoon to strengthen the levee south of Fulton which protects cultivated land of the Cornelius, Johnson, Shults, Koonce and Moore farms.

With a prediction that the river would reach 34 feet at Fulton before reaching its crest Friday or Saturday, the FERA office at Hope stood ready to send 200 or 300 men to the danger zones if additional help is called.

Reports from Fulton said Thursday that four more feet would probably send the river over the levee at that point.

Summer Sweethearts

By Mabel McElliott © 1935, NEA Service, Inc.

Her dark, exquisitely arched brows almost met over fine eyes of an intense dark blue. Her hair, fine and silky, with a sheen of authentic gold in its deep waves, was brushed straight back from her brow and gathered into a knot at the nape of her neck. Her white linen jodhpurs, her casually open white shirt, set off her looks to perfection. Yet there was something almost startling in the contrast between the darkness of those eyes and the fairness of her skin and hair. Katharine, in fact, was a mass of contradictions, and was occasionally proud of it. She was at once proud and humble, arrogant and gentle; her spirit suffered keenly because of the contrariness of her warring emotions.

This morning was a fair example. She had come to the riding club—Michael Heather's club—fully expecting Michael to accompany her on her morning canter. For weeks now—even since the early part of April, actually—that had been the accepted order of things. Katharine no longer needed the service of a groom. She handled the little mare now with spirit and authority, but it had been Michael's habit to mount his roan and lead her along the paths. This particular morning another pupil had been at the stables before her—a plump, dark, lusciously pretty girl whom Katharine recognized as Sally Moon, one of the girls who had gone to the same school Katharine had attended in the village of Innicoek, which lay below her now in the shimmering haze of morning. Sally's people owned a big, rambling white house on one of Innicoek's most fashionable streets. Like everything belonging to the Moons (Katharine said to herself) it was ugly, tasteless.

Katharine had nodded coldly to Sally who was resplendent in breeches and brightly polished boots and who wore the most absurd of crocheted yellow sports berets on her dark mass of curls, at an absurd angle.

The colored boy had come out, grinning at Katharine, leading the little mare known as Fury. Katharine had shut off the ignition, had leaped out of her car, and (not without a flourish) had mounted Fury's back with ease and elegance.

She had heard Sally say languidly to Tips:

"Is Michael coming?"

Out of the corner of her eye, Katharine had been aware that Tips had nodded in the direction of the stables, whence Michael Heather was at that moment emerging. The sun caught the crest of his red hair and made it gleam. Katharine felt her heart plunge, right itself. It was insane—this is the way her traitorous nerves always behaved when Michael first appeared on the scene. A perfectly ordinary young man in riding clothes, she told herself, proudly and scornfully; that was all he was.

Michael had greeted her with an unself-conscious smile. (Continued on page 5)

Fruit Vitamins Change as Treatment Varies

You can enjoy any of the fruits that appeal to you, and at the same time get most out of them in the form of vitamins. If you will remember that various processes to which fruits and vegetables are subjected have significant effects upon the vitamins.

It is known, for instance, that oxidation will destroy vitamin C, and that action of certain chemicals will have deteriorating effects upon other vitamins.

It is important to know this, since vitamins have been found to be essential factors in our diets, in addition to the proteins, carbohydrates, fats and mineral salts.

Recently, investigators of the University of California made a study of the amounts of the various vitamins in a certain variety of seedless grapes and in the raisins made from them.

Grapes constitute one of the most significant substances in diets throughout the world, and raisins made from grapes also are much used in various foods.

When the scientists tested frozen grapes, they found that there had been considerable decrease in vitamin value—about 50 per cent—in frozen storage.

Moreover, this destruction of vitamins seems to be progressive. Sun-dried raisins, for example, show only a slight trace of vitamin A, whereas dehydrated raisins, including those treated with sulphur, appear to retain the full vitamin A content of the fresh fruit.

Natural sun-dried raisins were found to be wholly lacking in vitamin A, and two soda-soaked products retained only 15 to 20 per cent of the vitamin value of the fresh fruit.

As far as vitamin C is concerned, none of the raisin products was found to be able to protect animals against scurvy. It was found, moreover, that grapes, whether in fresh form or in the form of raisins, were not especially rich in vitamin B.

Special interest attaches to the question of the effects of sulphur process on vitamins. This process is much used in preservation of fruits in a great many states.

Vitamins A and C are known to be destroyed readily by the oxidation processes and, therefore, would be protected by sulphur process. On the other hand, vitamin B would be injured by the same process.

For this reason, the California investigators are inclined to say that there is no single rule which embodies the best practice in drying methods for all fruits or for all vitamins. Each fruit should be preserved in the way in which most of the vitamin content with which it is endowed is saved.

Thus, peaches and apricots are the best sources of vitamins A and C and quite poor sources of vitamin B, and should be sulphured. Raisins and prunes are good sources of vitamin B and poor sources of vitamins A and C, and should not be sulphured.

Moreover, dehydration rather than sun-drying is advisable if the vitamin A is to be saved.

The investigations show also that fresh figs preserved in frozen storage contain vitamin C in measurable amounts similar to that in grapes and apricots, but less than that in fresh peaches and fresh prunes. Californian figs are richer in this vitamin than are Mission and Adriatic figs.

Dried figs do not contain measurable amounts of the anti-scurvy vitamin. Black Mission figs contain more vitamin A than any of the light-colored figs, and the sulphuring process aids in retaining vitamin A.

It was shown also with figs as with raisins that the dehydrated products are superior to sundried in retaining vitamin A.

Planting of Feed, Food Crops Urged

Farmers Urged to Avoid Buying Feed and Food With Proceeds of Cotton

During the last two decades Arkansas has greatly increased the proportion of cash crop acreage as compared with the acreage of feed and food crops, according to D. J. Burleson, extension agronomist of the University College of Agriculture.

A comparison of the acreages of cotton and feed crops during the 5-year period preceding the World War with the 5-year period preceding the depression shows the extent of the shift from feed crops to cotton. During the five years preceding the depression, 1926 to 1930, the average cotton acreage in Arkansas was 75 per cent higher than during the pre-war period, 1910 to 1914, while the corn acreage had decreased 21 per cent, and the oats acreage had decreased 48 per cent.

This big shift from feed and food crops to cash crops has made it necessary for farmers to spend a large portion of their cotton money for feed and food, and the shifting of feed acreage to cotton has also had something to do with the burdensome supply of cotton. Farmers now recognize the need for a live-at-home cropping program, even without assistance from the government in shifting some of the cotton acreage back to food and feed crops, says Mr. Burleson.

Fortunately, farmers may now plant needed feed and food crops on rented acres and establish a live-at-home cropping system. The balancing of feed crops and cash crops by utilizing rented acres for needed additional feed should be done with a view to making this live-at-home cropping system a permanent one, he declares.

Pointing out that if cotton farmers will make this cropping system permanent, the most lasting benefit from the crop adjustment program will be that Arkansas cotton crop will be a cash crop instead of a debt paying crop.

Plans for providing a liberal supply of grain, hay, and pasture to feed the livestock on the farm may be based on the number of needs of each type of animal, and the yields expected. Acreage requirements may be calculated on the basis of the following suggested needs: Each work animal, 30 bushels corn, or other grain; 17 bushels per milk cow, 8 bushels per hog; and 34 bushels per 100 chickens.

By adding up the total grain needs and dividing by the yield per acre, the number of acres required will be determined.

In calculating the acreage needed in hay crops, Mr. Burleson suggests that one ton is needed for each work animal and milk cow, and one third ton for other cattle. However, hay needs are reduced by good pasture.

Mr. Burleson offers the following suggestions for planting a balanced and dependable feed program which will reduce the dangers from drought as far as possible:

First, since corn is the most susceptible to drought damage of all feed crops, grain sorghums should be substituted for part of the corn acreage; second, at least three plantings of corn, early, medium, and late, should be made; third, since hay yields are better than corn yields, the fullest use should be made of hay crops to reduce the grain needs; and, fourth, since a good pasture is the source of the cheapest feed on the farm, an improved pasture should be a part of the farming system.

GLORIFYING YOURSELF

By Alicia Hart

Health Is Vital to Coiffure

The condition of hair has a very definite and close relationship to physical health. If your waves refuse to stay in and your hair seems dull and straggly, the chances are that you do not get proper rest or that your diet isn't right.

Anyway, for the sake of beauty, it's worth while to make a test to determine what is wrong.

Get eight hours sleep each night for two months. Drink eight glasses of water a day and try to eat sensible, well balanced meals. If at the end of this period you notice no improvement in your hair, better see a doctor at once.

In addition, it's an excellent idea to use some of the very fine tonics on the market today. There are special ones for certain ailments and, providing you use them regularly and correctly, they'll go a long way toward making your crowning glory more glorious.

If you have dandruff, be sure to sterilize combs and brushes every day. There's no use spending money on a tonic to get rid of the disagreeable white flakes if you keep on using brushes laden with germs. Never use a comb belonging to another person.

Each member of the family, including small children, should have their own hairbrush. Incidentally, don't use hot curling irons on a child's hair. Fingerwaves are harmless, of course, and if you little girl's hair has even a faint suggestion of a wave, push it into place with your fingers and a comb after each shampoo. However, always dry her hair in the open air and sunshine.

THE SIGN OF Happy Motoring!

Stop at any of the 30,000 Esso dealers and stations, displaying the familiar Esso sign, if you're in doubt about the route. Ask for a copy of "Esso Tours and Detours"—Esso Marketers official monthly publication containing authentic maps of current road construction; vacation information; touring data; etc. Individual road maps are also yours for the asking.

Parents... nowadays... are a problem, aren't they? Just take this matter of running the car.

Parents are just at that impressionable age when all these filling stations... with their bright pumps and luring claims... offer a constant temptation.

So I took my stand early. I insisted that my parents patronize only Esso dealers and stations. For Esso station products... backed by the world's leading petroleum organization... are the proven best you can buy.

So, believe me, you don't catch my parents driving in anywhere except at a familiar Esso sign!

And that takes a big load off my mind when I'm not along to look after things. For I'm sure that they're in good hands when they stop at an Esso sign and will get all those little courtesies and services that assure "Happy Motoring."

The John Cain chapter, D. A. R. held one of the most interesting meetings of the year on Wednesday with a 1 o'clock luncheon at the home of Mrs. Lee Holt in Washington, with Mrs. Chas. Leake, Mrs. Wilbur Jones and Miss Mary Catts as associate hostesses. A visit to the historic town of Washington, whose stately dignity and grandeur of bygone generations holds the imagination and brings into outline the ghost of an age of chivalry and romance is always a welcome pilgrimage and on this occasion, the true hospitality dispensed, still adhered to the traditions and principals of this old town so rich in historical lore. For the occasion, the Holt home was beautifully decorated with quantities of lovely flowers, and a most tempting luncheon was served from one large, beautifully appointed table and four small ones. Following the luncheon, a short business period was conducted by the regent, Miss Mamie Twichell who announced her program committee for the coming chapter year as follows: Mrs. George Sprague, Mrs. A. L. Black and Mrs. R. T. White. Plans were also discussed for the establishment of an educational fund. The regular program was dispensed with, as the meeting had the honor of having a guest of international note, Mrs. Jennie Delaney Meyerowitz of New York, who gave a most interesting talk on her travels in Europe. The hostesses were assisted in the courtesies of the day by Miss Katherine Holt. The next meeting will be held on the 14th of June, Flag day, with a luncheon in Texarkana at a joint meeting with the Aexarkana and DeQueen chapters.

Mrs. W. F. Youmans, Mrs. O. Haynes of Lewisville and Miss Mollie Nance of Washington, D. C. were Wednesday shoppers in the city.

Miss Annice Cagle of Ouachita college, Arkadelphia, was the Wednesday night guest of her grandmother, Mrs. L. E. Singleton and other relatives.

Mrs. J. O. Milam entertained very delightfully at her home on South Washington street, on Sunday in celebration of her husband's birthday anniversary. The table was laid with satin finish monogrammed damask and held for its central adornment a bowl of lovely pink radiance roses, pink tapers burned in silver candelabra and covers were laid for Mr. and Mrs. H. T. Edwards of Hot Springs, Okla., and Mrs. H. C. Edwards of Tulsa, Okla., Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Milam and Miss Eva Jean Milam.

A most interesting meeting of Circle No. 1 of the W. M. S. of the First Methodist church was held at the home of Mrs. E. E. White on North Louisiana street, with Mrs. C. D. Lester and Mrs. Sam Taylor as associate hostesses. Lovely flowers added their beauty and fragrance to the rooms and 12 members responded to the roll call. The meeting was opened by the leader, Mrs. Claude Nunn and Mrs. R. M. Bryant gave a very beautiful devotional. A splendid program on "Pioneer Work of the Southern Methodist church for the Negro" was presented by Mrs. C. Cook, with Mrs. C. D. Lester discussing the life of Bishop William Tapers, and Mrs. Ernest O'Neal telling of Paine college at Augusta, Ga., a co-educational institution for negroes, operated and owned by the Southern Methodist church. Dr. Fred R. Harrison was an appreciated visitor and gave an inspiring talk on plans for serving Pentecostal season, urging each member to enter into all the services. The meeting closed with prayer. During the social hour, tempting sandwiches were served with hot tea.

Homecoming to Be Held This Sunday

Rev. John Sutton, Jackson, Miss., to Be Washington Speaker

Washington is expecting an unusually large number of her former citizens to attend the Homecoming celebration to be held here next Sunday. It will be the 13th annual event to be held here on Mother's Day Sunday.

Each year her former citizens from Texarkana, Little Rock, Shreveport, El Dorado, Memphis, St. Louis and many other cities and towns, come back to Washington for a renewal of friendships and acquaintances. So long has this being going on now that Homecoming has become somewhat of an institution to Washington, and the probability voiced this year that there would be no Homecoming, was met with such a protest from the visitors that local people immediately decided to continue the affair annually.

As has been the custom all the while, some visiting minister will be asked to deliver the sermon on Mother's Day. Services will be held in the Methodist church this year, it being the Methodist's turn in accordance with the customary plan of rotation. The announcement that the sermon will be delivered by the Rev. John Sutton of Jackson, Mississippi, former local man, and who delivered the Homecoming sermon here three years ago, from services at the Methodist church, the visitors will be invited to the court house lawn where the noon day meal will be served by Washington people. The afternoon will be spent in visiting various spots in and around Washington.

All of Washington's former citizens are cordially invited to attend the 1935 Homecoming celebration, no matter whether they have previously attended or not.

Special Pool Formed

Meantime the Farm Administration Wednesday created a special pool to handle sale of 1934-35 tax exemption certificates under the Bankhead control act to producers seeking to sell cotton in excess of their 1934 allotments. The new pool was formed to assure a supply of certificates for producers who may wish to buy them early in the 1935-36 ginning season.

It is optional with the producers, the AAA said, whether their share of the pooled certificates is placed in the special pool. Producers who did not participate in the 1934-35 pool but are holding tax exemption certificates issued for use last year may place these certificates in the special pool.

The special pool will operate "for a limited time" and will have tax exemption certificates available for sale as soon as ginning begins in the more advanced cotton areas.

Stroud Advocates Bankhead Change

Hempstead Farmer Sends Congressmen Some Proposed Amendments

A. N. Stroud, one of Hempstead county's leading farmers, is sending letters this week to Senators Robinson and Caraway and Congressman Tillman B. Parks, advocating a change in the Bankhead Act which he says will be much more equitable to all the farmers of the cotton producing states.

Mr. Stroud's plan is as follows: Instead of the government's requesting a reduction of 25 to 35 per cent from former acreages, the government demand that not more than 50 per cent of the annually cultivated acreage on any farm be planted to cotton. Payments for the reduction would not be materially affected as a whole, but such a plan would prevent the large cotton farmers who have for years devoted 80 and 90 per cent of their annually cultivated land to cotton, from reducing 25 and 35 per cent and still be planting more cotton than the farmer on a farm of equal size who formerly planted less than half of his cultivated acres to cotton.

Mr. Stroud goes on to state that he has never planted more than 50 per cent of his cultivated land to cotton while many farmers operating the same amount of ground along the river and in other sections have been planting 80 per cent and more of their ground to cotton. He contends that the 35 per cent reduction for both is not as equitable as it would be for the Secretary of Agriculture to order that not more than 50 per cent of the cultivated land on any farm be planted in cotton.

While it is problematical whether Mr. Stroud's letter to the Arkansas delegation will receive any attention or not, yet, large things are sometimes accomplished from small beginnings. Others who believe that Mr. Stroud's plan would be better than the present Bankhead law might voice their ideas to our lawmakers, and eventually some result might be forthcoming.

WATCH KIDNEYS
SAME AS BOWELS

Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes!
Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.

Healthy persons pass thru the bladder 2 pints a day and get rid of more than 8 pounds of waste matter.
If you pass less than this, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.

Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years.
They give happy relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.

"Sorry I can't ride with you, I've a lesson." He had thrown a glance in Sally's direction, and Katharine had forced her stiff lips into the semblance of a smile. Naturally he would ride with Sally Moon, if she were a beginner. It was Michael (whose riding school it was) who was gentlest and most patient with the beginners. His assistants, Roddy and young Jim, were neither such expert horsemen as he, nor so adept with the nervous amateurs. Only—only—why had Sally chosen Katharine's special hour? It was maddening.

Katharine threw up her hand some head with an impatient gesture, going over the brief scene again. All its images were all bottled against a slide in her brain. Sally, with her over-ripe lips, her instantly feminine curves, forced into the restrictions of breeches and tailored coat, her dark curls contemptuously foaming beneath her hat. Katharine herself, fair and tanned, in white linen, frowning a little in spite of herself. And Michael, casual as he always was in old whipcord with an olive green sweater. Michael, who had lost all he owned out in Montana and who had come east to start over again.

"I'm quite, quite mad," she confided to the silent maid, riding by. Certainly it was none of her business if Michael had a new pupil. He needed all he could get during the spring and summer seasons. All the summer people went back to the city the first of September, leaving Innickoek shuttered and silent. No, Michael had to look to his own affairs while summer people rented big houses on the bay and along the lanes. If Sally Moor learned to ride at the Shady Ridge Academy, then so much the better for young Heatheroe, with his easygoing western ways and lazy drawl.

SOME men liked Sally Moon's type; there was no doubt about that. Sally was luscious, sun-kissed, like a peach that has ripened over-long. Her chocolate-colored eyes slid in all directions, especially in the direction of what ever man happened to be about. She had a way of sliding up to men, half bold, half coy.

"I can't—I won't compete with that sort of thing," Katharine Strykhurst confided aloud to the world and was startled at herself. Who was asking her to compete with Sally? What on earth was she raving about?

She began to laugh, and with the first rippling sound her black mood slid from her shoulders. What a fool she was, making a mountain out of a molehill! Michael was her friend, a tall, rangy young man with a slow smile and a caressing note in his voice for everyone. Sally was only a small-town coquette with too much makeup on and a trick of making every triangular conversation seem a competition in sex.

In a good humor now, Katharine galloped the mare the last few paces of that stretch of lane which would presently cross the Shore Road which was Innickoek's main artery. This far out, it was a broad ribboned highway, flanked by red and white gas stations and an occasional mammoth sign. A mile or two back from the Sound, it became Innickoek's Main Street, with tall maples shading old white houses with green shutters. Farther down still was the bank, the white-painted church, the library, Miss Matilda's nursery school, and a grocery store. Innickoek was an old village, sleepy, comfortable, leisurely. Katharine often said, with passion, that she hated it. She lived in one of the oldest and largest of the stone houses down on the point. It was set in the midst of park-like acres. Its Norman turret was hung with ivy, and in summer clematis drooped mournfully from its portico. Within it was dark with seasoned oak, eastern rugs, bronze lamps and red velvet hangings. Twenty-five years ago it had been a "show-place," and in the eyes of Katharine's trim, modern stepmother it was that still. Her father, white-haired, portly, a lawyer down in the city, never thought of changing anything about it. True, an oil burner had replaced the coal furnace several years ago, and two or three of the bedrooms had suffered innovations in the way of colored tiling and set tubs. Otherwise it was unchanged.

Katharine said to herself that she hated it. When she came into her mother's money—that would be next March, and she was looking forward to it—she would find her self a gay, modern apartment down in the city and would furnish it in the modern manner—tweed fabrics, chairs fashioned of chromium tubing, angled tables with glittering mirrored surfaces. Meantime she merely existed among the furnishings which had seemed so grand to her mother as a bride a quarter of a century past.

Her father and her stepmother had no idea what went on under those smooth fair brows. Inwardly Katharine seethed; outwardly, at least, she was calm. This riding club of Michael Heatheroe's had given her a much-needed outlet lately. When things palled on her, when life seemed "too utterly poisonous" to bear another minute, she would slip into her riding things and drive over to Shady Ridge where the good smell of trampled earth, the stamping of horses in their stalls satisfied something in herself. Not that she would acknowledge, even for a minute, that she was interested in Michael.

It was only that later, changing rear at some cross-light or slipping heedlessly along in traffic, some word or gesture of the red-haired young man's would come back to her; she would catch her breath and smile, hugging the thought to herself. Then, instantly, she would be her old cool self again. Michael Heatheroe? What was he but a sort of groom—no one the Strykhursts could possibly know!

A GLANCE at her watch now warned her that her hour was nearly ended. She spurred the little horse back in the direction from which she had come. Usually Sally and Michael cantered easily along those green fields, in the lush and full perfection of summer morning. But now Katharine hurried, as though some demon pursued her. Her breath came fast and unevenly; her hair began to curl in little damp ringlets about her face. She told herself that she was hastening back because she had an appointment for luncheon. Even privately, she would not admit that she could not bear to see Sally and Michael cantering easily, turning together in pleasant intimacy. Perhaps he would have his ungloved hand on Sally's bridle—no, she could not bear that!

Fury paused obediently now at the intersection of the bridge path and River Road. Michael had taught her to do this and, even though Katharine's touch on the bridle urged her on, she hesitated, nervously pawing the red earth. Katharine, roused from her thoughts, stared unseeing for a moment into the eyes of the girl in the little green car which had drawn up as Fury emerged from the green tunnel.

"Zoe Parker! When did you get back?"

CHAPTER I-A

The car door slammed and Zoe ran forward, uttering shrill cries of greeting. Zoe, Katharine told herself critically, was really lovely. Those glittering white teeth, that charming warm blush of sunburn, those bright blue dancing eyes! Fity Zoe was such a crashing fool!

"Hello, darling!"

Zoe was in white linen with a vest of dark blue linen, dotted in white. Her shoes, her hat, her gloves were all unbelievably crisp. "You look smart!"

"Thanks. You do, too, darling!"

Zoe cried. "We just got in last night. I was going to call you. How are you and what've you been doing?"

"Oh, the usual," Katharine drawled.

"I'm crazy to see everybody," Zoe declared. Everybody knew that Zoe's ambitious mother had whisked her to Europe in May in order to avoid a scandal about Gibbs Larkin. Gibbs was 35, handsome in a thoroughly dissolute way, conscienceless. Zoe had fallen headlong in love with him, with all her lightning impetuosity. Gibbs, people said, would never marry. He was one of those eternal bachelors who slip sweets where they will. Zoe had recklessly and defiantly been seen with him every place.

They chatted for a few moments longer, making an engagement to meet that afternoon.

"Has she 'got over' Gibbs?" Katharine wondered. She did hope Zoe would spare her the confidences. These love recitals were bound to be boring. Katharine prided herself on her imperviousness to the grand passion. Love was stupid. It tied you all up, got your feelings confused. There was no sense to it.

All of which, of course, had nothing whatever to do with her feelings about Michael. She and Michael had simply been friends, good comrades, and it was perfectly natural she should be slightly miffed when he so casually gave away the hour which had been sacred to her for months.

THAT was Thursday morning. On Friday she went for her ride as usual, and Michael was there, tall, lean and casual.

"Mawna!"

She smiled at him with just the right degree of casualness. "Good morning."

He tightened a strap, patted Prince Charlie's gleaming flank. "Storm comin' up," he announced.

"Oh, do you think so?" But Katharine's query was not the usual feminine flutter. She adored storms.

"Maybe I'd better take this," Michael hung an oldskin slicker across Prince Charlie's back.

"Not for me," Katharine said coolly.

The red-haired young man glanced at her quizzically a moment, then called to Tips: "Here, catch this!"

The slicker sailed through the air, landing in a pile of hay. The colored boy ran to retrieve it, with a flash of white teeth in an ebony face.

Presently Michael had a blaze going. Katharine, looking down at him, said, "Well, go on—lecture me—"

"Just as you say," Michael announced. He swung a long leg over his western saddle, leading the way.

The trees arched overhead in a conspiracy of silence. In the dim interstices where the sky could be seen there were patches of angry clouds. From the west rose a rumble of deep thunder.

"You won't mind gettin' wet?"

He looked back at her over his shoulder, his gentle voice courteous as usual.

Katharine laughed. "No, why should I?"

The deep roll of distant thunder increased. They crossed an open meadow with a river meandering alongside and an orange flash of lightning licked across the sky. Suddenly they were again in the woods, the horses wading carefully through the shallow stream and plunging up the muddy banks.

NOW the rain came down, suddenly, in torrents, in violent sheets. For the main part, the trees protected them, but soon the path again crossed a civilized road, a main highway. Great angry peals of thunder sounded, and the sky was made livid by the almost continual flashes of lightning. The horses were nervous. Fury danced and whinnied, refusing to proceed.

At the side of the road was a small blue-roofed cottage which had once housed a district school, and later an amateur radio station. It was unoccupied now. At the rear was a rude shelter for horses. Michael, without consulting Katharine, cantered back to her and, seizing Fury's bridle, led the nervous little animal under cover.

"We'd better stop here a minute," he said quietly. "It's foolhardy to go on just now."

Michael helped her to dismount. Then he tied both Fury and Prince a little and shiver and be wistful, and there would be a good deal of argument about accepting the man's coat. Michael didn't have a coat, but that didn't matter. He ought at least to show some human concern about her. Why, she might have pneumonia!

KATHARINE, struck suddenly by the utter nonsense of her reasoning (she almost never had a cold), laughed aloud.

"What's the joke?"

She glanced, sideways, at Michael Heatheroe. "Nothing you'd understand!"

He flushed, the brick tint showing about the deep dark stain of his sunburn.

"I'm not so slow," he drawled in that easy western voice of his.

"I didn't mean that," Katharine hastened to say.

Outside the thunder rolled and pealed, the sky steadily darkened, and occasional angry flashes of lightning illumined the room. The rain, obedient to a derisive wind, tore in at the door, and Michael closed it. Now they were shut in together.

"This may go on all morning," she said, at random, wishing only to break the silence.

"Oh, I don't think it will. It's lifting now."

But she had the feeling that he, too, wasn't thinking of what he was saying.

"Fury doesn't like it," he said, of the lightning. "She's nervous."

"Just like a woman," Katharine said scornfully.

Her tone roused him.

"I've known plenty of men who didn't like storms, either."

"Oh, but have you?" Katharine mocked him. Some devil of perverseness seemed to possess her. She wanted to startle, shock, annoy him—stir him out of his usual calm acceptance of her.

"Sure enough!"

SHE stared at him, drinking in every line of his face, the quizzical gray eyes with the little laughter wrinkles etched around them. Michael was—how old? Twenty-eight? His shoulders were broad, his waist slim, like a true horseman's. She knew, she told herself, dozens of men, better looking, smarter, better educated in every way. Why on earth did she bother with him?

"You don't think much of us around here, do you?" she pursued, scarcely knowing what she said.

"You all—people in Innickoek?"

"Yes. You think we're all spoiled children—or something?" Her tone was hateful and she knew it, but for the life of her she couldn't change it.

Michael stared at her thoughtfully. She had an impulse, almost irresistible, to reach up and rumple that dark red crest of hair, from which the stubborn curl had carefully been ironed only that morning.

"Folks around here have been mighty nice to me."

"Mighty nice!" She mocked his soft, easy drawl.

Suddenly she felt both her hands imprisoned, in a grip of steel. Gray eyes darkening like the stormy skies without looked into hers.

"You don't—you mustn't . . ."

"Mustn't what?"

The treacherous tide within her warmed her heart. Was this surrender, of which she had heard so much?

But Michael Heatheroe dropped her hands, released her as suddenly as he had seized her. "I beg your pardon," he muttered. "You sure made me mad, Miss Strykhurst. I guess I forgot myself."

Former Governor Saved by Appeal

Langer Conviction Reversed for New Trial in North Dakota

ST. PAUL, Minn.—(AP)—The United States Circuit Court of Appeals Tuesday reversed the conviction of William Langer, former governor of North Dakota, and four others charged with conspiracy to misuse federal relief funds. The four were convicted in federal court in North Dakota June 17, 1934.

The case was remanded to the district court for a new trial. The five were convicted under an indictment which charged them and four others with conspiracy to administer corruptly federal statutes relating to the distribution of emergency relief funds.

Testimony at the original trial showed relief workers had been assessed contributions of five per cent of their salaries to the Langer, Langer political newspaper.

Convicted with Langer, who was sentenced to serve 18 months in a federal penitentiary and pay a $10,000 fine, were Oscar J. Chaput, Frank A. Vogel, former state highway commissioner; R. A. Kinzer, secretary of the State Emergency Relief Committee, and Harold McDonald, solicitor for the leaders. Their cases also were covered by the appeal.

Langer, who was state relief administrator under federal appointment at the time of the alleged violation, subsequently was removed as governor by the State Supreme Court.

The court in effect held the evidence presented at the trial was not sufficient to demonstrate overt acts which in themselves would constitute substantive offenses.

"Whatever we may think of the ethics of propriety of the practice employed by appellants to secure funds for political purposes," the court said, "it is not a matter of concern to the federal government unless some lawful governmental function was thereby obstructed. In other words, a conspiracy or plan to assess state employees was not an act violative of any federal statute and hence so far as the federal government is concerned not criminal. We have searched diligently for direct evidence of any plan beyond this and counsel for the government have called out attention to no such testimony."

Earhart Flies to N. Y. From Mexico

Woman Aviator Sets a New Non-Stop Mark of 14 Hours

NEWARK, N. J.—(AP)—Amelia Earhart piloted her red monoplane across the 2,100 miles between Mexico, D. F., and Newark airport Wednesday in the first nonstop flight from the Mexican capital to the Greater New York area. Her face and hands were dirty, but she grinned as she landed her ship at 9:28:50 p. m. Eastern Standard Time, 14 hours, 22 minutes and 30 seconds after her takeoff from a three-mile runway at the Mexican capital. She landed as one of the greatest crowds ever assembled at Newark airport shouted and screamed their cheers and struggled against an inadequate force of 30 policemen, assigned to the field for the emergency. She said she carefully observed the ship's behavior as it raced down the three-mile runway with its heavy load of fuel and oil. After landing she had enough fuel to go 40 minutes more in the air. "I didn't push the ship at any time during the trip, and I tried to conserve

Holding Company Abolition Favored

Senate Committee Sustains President's Views by Vote of 11 to 3

WASHINGTON—(AP)—The senate interstate commerce committee Wednesday approved a bill providing for holding company bill the provision for abolishing public utility holding companies but modified it to extend the time for abolition. The committee then approved a modifying section which broadened authority of the Federal Power Commission to extend the time for holding companies to divest themselves of their control over subsidiaries. The date of January 1, 1940 was left in the bill but it provided one year would be given the holding company to carry out the order of the commission to divest itself of control.

Revival Is Opened at First Methodist

Easter-to-Pentecost Services Based on the Book of Acts

The Easter to Pentecost Revival at First Methodist church was begun Wednesday night at 7:30 o'clock, with 110 members present. A goal of 120 persons—the same number who met in the Upper Room in Jerusalem—had been set for each Wednesday night during May. A spirit of interest characterized the service, and it is believed that a larger congregation will be present next week. The congregation was composed of boys and girls, young people and adults. The pastor, the Rev. Fred R. Harrison, conducted the service and discussed the first seven chapters in the Book of Acts, which is being used as the basis of the devotional for the Wednesday night services during May. Those who attend are asked to read Chapters 8 to 14. The Sunday sermons by the pastor during the month of May will be based on texts found in the Book of Acts. Suggestions for sermons will be welcomed. On May 30 a ten-day revival service, with meetings to be held on the church lawn, will be started to culminate Pentecost Sunday, June 9.

Brookwood P. T. A. Holds Final Meet

Pearl Williamson, De-Queen Superintendent, Addresses Hope Group

At the last meeting of the Brookwood P. T. A., Wednesday, Miss Pearl Williamson, superintendent of schools at DeQueen, was the principal speaker. Preceding her talk, the business session, presided over by the president, Mrs. J. R. Henry, was held. The report of the nominating committee was read and approved and the following officers were installed by Mrs. C. D. Lester: president, Mrs. Orville Erlinger; vice-president, Mrs. Eugene White; treasurer, Mrs. Alfred Morsani. A letter from Mrs. Byron Goodson, the director of District No. 13, was read, telling of the favorable impression made by the Arkansas group at the national convention of Parent-Teachers, held in Miami, Fla., last month. Mrs. Burgher Jones read the President's Message. In the count of mothers the dollar was given to Miss Owens' room. Mrs. A. C. Kolb spoke on "The Effect of Alcohol and Narcotics on Our Youth." In the absence of the program chairman, Mrs. Edwin Dosselt introduced Miss Williamson who spoke on "The Influence of Religion on a Child's Character." She began by saying that it was practically impossible to estimate the effect of religion on a child's character because we see so little of religion in these days. So few persons really live their religion, and our children watching us, are not fooled by our punctilious observance of church affairs and our corresponding lack of a thoughtful, forgiving Christian spirit in our daily lives. Children are bound to be influenced by the lives we lead; daily association with right living has its effect. Religious training should have a place in our lives but religious practice is of much greater importance. The cheerful face, the contented mind, and the grateful heart are the earmarks of a great character. Childhood is plastic and can be molded at will. Shall we say then that we have pupil-teacher, or parent and teacher failures? We can not compel children to have desirable patterns of conduct, but we can use every example possible to lead children to want to do right. We must dig deeper than mere words to reach children, for, as Hugh Harbison says, "Religion is solid mahogany, not veneer." A good influence is the real cradle of character. If we can cultivate in our children a love of the beautiful, then we have helped to bring them above the level of self-seeking. If we can give them the power to enjoy and create beauty, then we have given them that which will stand them in good stead in the crisis of life. Quoting Dr. Artman, Miss Williamson closed her talk with this thought, "Any phase of life, when lived as it should be, is spiritual." A genuinely religious person dedicates himself to the service of others. Any life rightly lived will have a strong influence for good.

Declares It Would Rob Press Conference of Informal Atmosphere

WASHINGTON—(AP)—President Roosevelt declined to send the house a transcript of the press conference last Friday at which he hit back at National Chamber of Commerce criticism of the New Deal. In a letter to Speaker Byrns the president said it would establish a "precedent" which he did not consider "advisable" if he complied with the request. "It is my desire," the president wrote, "that these conferences should be continued on the free and open basis which I have endeavored to maintain at all times. To create the precedent of permitting questions and answers which

Group Insurance Act Held Invalid

Attorney General Gives Opinion on Proposed State Insurance

LITTLE ROCK—Act 122 of 1935, providing for group insurance for state employees to be paid for jointly by the state and the employees, was held invalid Wednesday by Attorney General Carl E. Bailey because the bill was not passed by a two-thirds majority of each house. The opinion, addressed to Governor Patrell, chairman of the Insurance Board set up in the bill, said the bill would have required two-thirds vote in both houses to make it effective because paying insurance premiums for employees is not a "necessary expense of government," and because the subject matter calling for the appropriation had not been provided for by pre-existing laws. The bill (H. B. 352 by Pilkinton) passed the house, 83 to 1, and the senate vote was 23 to 11, one short of two-thirds majority. The governor, lieutenant governor and attorney general were named in the bill as a board to supervise the awarding of a contract for group insurance. The board met three weeks ago to receive bids and proposals were submitted by a dozen insurance companies, but action was deferred pending an investigation of validity of the appropriation feature, which authorized disbursing agents for departments to pay the state's part of premiums from the departmental maintenance fund.

Soil Conservation Day to Be Aug. 1

State-Wide Celebration Arranged at Conway for U. S. Soil Program

CONWAY, Ark.—Agricultural leaders, teachers of vocational education, extension workers, chamber of commerce, colleges and laymen, will combine efforts in dedicating August 1, 1935, as Soil Conservation Day for Arkansas. Committees have been appointed to work out the details for an impressive program embracing the efforts of both state and federal agencies operating in the field of agriculture. The committee for the state is composed of T. Roy Reid, director of the Extension Service; E. B. Matthews, director of vocational and adult education in Arkansas; J. W. Hull, president of the Arkansas Polytechnic college; Colonel H. L. McAlister, president of Arkansas State Teachers college; and Fred C. Newport, regional director of the Soil Conservation Service, at Conway. Arrangements have been made whereby the people of the South will have an opportunity to hear talks by bureau heads in the Department of Agriculture from Washington. A local committee composed of Theodore Smith, President of the Chamber of Commerce, George L. Bachlor, president of the Rotary club, Coach Ivan Grove, and Gene Williams, is charged with the responsibility of soliciting good fellowship from among the town, county, and districts of the state, to the end the responsibilities and pleasures are balanced and all people have an opportunity to familiarize themselves with the known measures of national conservation sponsored during the celebration.

New Test Suit on Gold Is Planned

Will Attempt to Swap $1,000 Bond for $1,690 in Income Taxes

WASHINGTON—(AP)—A new test of the administration's gold abrogation, intended to compel Treasury acceptance at their old gold value of government securities offered in payment of taxes, was in preparation here Wednesday. The plans, drawn to conform with the supreme court's decision in the gold cases, were reported to have the backing of a group well known in financial circles, with the assistance of a leading New York law firm. These involved in the new attack on President Roosevelt's monetary policies planned to present to the Treasury on June 15, a Treasury gold note for $1,000 maturing on that date. They will demand that it be accepted in payment of $1,690 in income taxes also due June 15, contending that the old gold dollar is worth $1.69 in devalued bills. The expected Treasury refusal to accept the bond at this figure would be followed by a court suit. TVA Power Dam Is Bitterly Attacked

Vermont Republican Raps Government Tennessee Development

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Charges of "violations of the law" were made against the Tennessee Valley Authority in the senate Wednesday by Senator Austin, Republican, Vermont, in a speech that threatened to delay indefinitely the chamber's action on the NRA extension bill. Opposing a motion by Senator Norris, Republican, Nebraska, to take up the later's bill to re-declare the project and double the bond issuing authority of TVA, Austin said that a comptroller general's audit showed it had spent $250,000,000 in its two years of operation, or five times its original authorization. Austin said he had been advised the audit also showed "abuses, excesses of authority, violations of the law, overpayment of salaries and contracts, contracts made in the teeth of the law, mismanagement and waste of the people's money."

Relief Fund Denied by Illinois House

Refuses to Adopt Emergency 3 Per Cent Sales Tax—Treasury Empty

SPRINGFIELD, Ill.—(AP)—In spite of Illinois empty relief coffers, the house Wednesday night remained adamant in its stand against emergency approval of the 3 per cent sales tax. After a bitter partisan debate the house balloted for a third time on the measure it halted last week and once more Democratic administration leaders were unable to round up the 120 votes necessary to meet the federal relief requirements for immediate enactment. Before the roll call was completed proponents of the measure which would raise the needed $3,000,000 or thirty, suspended further consideration—a parliamentary move which will keep the bill alive. "Though the plight of Illinois' 1,200,000 unemployed continued to border on the desperate, neither side in the legislature showed any inclination to yield in ballot or debate."
